I have gone through the IANA Stewardship Transition Proposal and I believe it is in good shape and should be approved. The proposal has been developed through an open process that has included the various consumers of the IANA functions.

The proposal relies to a large extent on existing oversight processes and mechanisms that have been tried and tested over the years and is structured to receive and incorporate inputs from a variety of stakeholders. It also minimizes the operational changes necessary to create a robust oversight and accountability regime so that there are no harmful disruptions to Internet when this transition happens.

I also like the fact that the proposal does not replace NTIA's role with that of another single organization, but rather proposes structures have been designed to prevent subversion from any individual constituency, including national governments.

Thanks
